

Cronyism: Liberty versus Power in Early America, 1607-1849

Errata

1. P.27: “1711 and 1722 White Pine Acts”
2. P.37: “(the reactionary position supported by Robert Morris and his associates)”
3. P.39: Murray N. Rothbard, An Austrian Perspective on the History of Economic Thought, 1, pp.327-35, 425-31, 437-38, 462-63
4. P.45: “Rhode Island had not yet ratified the impost amendment”
5. P.55: “Congressman Lee successfully defeated a navigation act amendment in 1785”
6. P.84: “which was ‘based on something better than general optimism.”
7. P.103: “argued that the Constitution’s general welfare, post roads, and necessary and proper clauses provided justification for subsidies and government construction of internal improvements.”
8. P.173: “Concerning their impressments, which increased from 2,400 between 1792 and 1802 to 6,000 in 1812.”
9. P.192: “presented the notes and deposits for specie redemption at their subsidized rivals in the rest of the country”
10. P.210: “Real GDP and industrial production only declined to 1.9 percent and 4.1 percent in 1819”
11. P.232: “the investment purportedly earned a lucrative 8 percent annual rate of return”
12. P.326: “as well as Polk’s nephew James Knox Walker”